ELITE

Command your Cobra space ship in a fantastic voyage of discovery and adventure, a supreme test of your combat, navigational and entrepreneurial skills.

Trade between countless planets, using the proceeds to equip your ship with heat-seeking missiles, beam lasers and other weapons – corporate states can be approached without risk, but unruly anarchies may be swarming with space pirates.

Black market trading can be lucrative but could result in skirmishes with local police and a price on your head!

However you make your money, by fair means or foul, you must blast onwards through space annihilating pirate ships and hostile aliens as you strive to earn your reputation as one of the Elite!

THE HUNT FOR RED OCTOBER

SILENTLY, BENEATH THE CHILL ATLANTIC WATERS, RUSSIA'S ULTRA-SECRET MISSILE SUBMARINE, THE RED OCTOBER, IS HEADING WEST.

The Americans want her.
The Russians want her back.
The most incredible chase in history is on...

Screen shots taken from Atari 520 ST version

RED OCTOBER is the latest Soviet Nuclear ballistic missile submarine. Armed with 26 SS-N-20 Seahawk missiles it is capable of destroying 200 cities. It is also the first Soviet submarine equipped with the unique Caterpillar propulsion system making detection nearly impossible.

In this simulation you are Captain First Rank Marko Ramius, Commander of Red October. Your mission is to reach the United States of America – TO DEFECT!

Your first challenge is to negotiate the Reykjanes Ridge, off the Icelandic coast, evading the Soviet Red Banner fleet pursuing you. Once into the Atlantic you must successfully rendezvous with the US Navy and feign the destruction of Red October. Your crew is not aware of the defection but the Soviet Navy is. Its objective is to stop you – at any cost!

Ahead are many dangers and challenges. To succeed requires all the skill and cunning of the greatest submariner in the Soviet Navy. You have full control on screen of sonar; the unique Caterpillar drive system; attack and search periscopes; torpedoes, and more...

Discovery results in confrontation with the most powerful fleet in the world. When to attack? When to hide? When to run? The judgement is yours!

VERDICT ★★★

Bouncer is a converted version of the game of the same name that has been widely acclaimed on other popular home micros.

The press release that came with the game announces that Bouncer is back — we didn't even know it had gone away.

Anyway to get back to the game. Bouncer revolves around a bouncing ball and is very reminiscent of the phenomenally successful Boulderdash. With Bouncer you have to bounce onto hexagonal slabs. Miss the slabs and you're a goner.

There are various sorts of aliens out to destroy you and these include binoculoids, stickits, moscits, bomber domes, pterries and coins.

However the good news is that there are a few friendly aliens such as the teleports and the bonus bugs.

Despite the very colourful cassette cover the game is very plain. The first level is played on an off white and black background and at first I found it visually very confusing and failed to get anywhere.

But, perseverance paid off and once through the first level you have to bounce your way around a bonus level which bumps up your score quite considerably.

Getting to level two is a welcome break not just because the scenery is different but it is also a different colour, a dirty yellow.

Again you have to bounce your way around the screen avoiding the nasties and scoring as many points as possible.

To be honest when I first played the game it didn't appeal, but I'm glad I gave it another go. Once you've worked out what to do and where the best positions are it's really good fun. In fact it has the same addictive qualities as Boulderdash and with the right marketing it could turn out to be just as popular and become a classic.

Once you become fairly adept, you can start to show off (as I did) and take longer jumps so that you have time to give your chums an aerobatics display!

As for playing techniques you will undoubtedly find the pause function very useful for freezing the game so that you can draw a map and mark the danger zones.

It is also worth ignoring the instructions that run across the screen as the programmer tries to kid you that you haven't got a cat in hell's chance of winning unless you use a joystick.

Speaking from experience that's absolute nonsense and he's having you on. The keyboard gives you more tactile control which means you land on more slabs and get more points and what do points make?

At £8.95 it is a little price for a cassette based game but fun to play.

CLUEDO

A murder has been committed on the ground floor of a country mansion called Tudor Close. The body is that of Doctor Black, the owner of the house.

Who committed the murder, what weapon did he or she use and where was the gruesome crime carried out? Solving the mystery is the name of Virgin's latest release for MSX, a computer version of the famous Cluedo board game.

Fans of the game will know that it is a game of investigation, detection, skill and a lot of luck. The object is to find the villain by a process of elimination.

The game starts with the players being given a limited number of clues and the first one to find out who did the dirty deed, what with and where, wins and can go into business as a private eye.

You can either play against the computer which will assume the roles of the other five occupants of the house or you and a buddy can pit your wits against the computer and each other.

Playing the computer version cuts out the need to physically throw the dice, move the counters and the implements but you still need the notepad to make your notes and try to eliminate the innocent parties from your enquiries.

Thankfully Virgin includes a wad of detective notes with the game but avid players will soon get through them so unless the company is going to supply refills you'd better have a rubber handy.

Like those of other Virgin releases the graphics in Cluedo are superb, very clear, bright and detailed. An exact replica of the board appears each time a player throws the dice and when it comes to making an accusation the guilty party, murder weapon and the room appears on the screen. If the accusation is incorrect the game continues.

The sound effects are monotonous and do little to enhance the game. Apart from these minor quibbles, it is a very good simulation of the real thing. Board games don't have sound effects, after all, and you can always turn the volume down.

There aren't many board games that have been successfully translated into computer versions. But Virgin is onto a definite winner as the titles it chooses are classic games that appeal to all ages and will never be out of fashion.

At £9.95 the cassette is probably cheaper than the actual board game and is just as much fun to play. If you're on the lookout for a game to keep yourself occupied during the summer months, Cluedo should be at the top of the list.

Mouser

by Sony

CART: £188

We have come across some pretty extraordinary games in our time with titles to match, but Mouser is one of the strangest.

It is based on the familiar cat chasing mouse theme, but there isn't a mouse to be seen anywhere — only rats!

The idea is to rescue Tom's girlfriend, Kitty who is being held hostage by the Frat Rats on the fifth floor.

As Tom tries to climb up, Boss rat chucks down quantities of flowerpots and rolling balls. As well as avoiding these, Tom has to eat the fish liberally strewn around on each floor.

Sounds easy, but there is a catch — the ladder from fourth to fifth floor is missing and will only appear after Tom has caught a certain number of rats.

When Kitty is finally rescued, the event is heralded with a quick burst of Mendelssohn's wedding march — very sweet!

On level two, the going really gets tough, twirling spanners and dynamite (they don't kid around these rats!) attack Tom together with more flower pots and missing platforms.

Our only complaint is that the graphics, although excellent, tend to flicker when Tom is balanced between floors.

If you are bored with adventure games, alien zapping and need something light hearted and amusing, then do consider Mouser.

Boulderdash

by Orpheus Software

CASS: £6.958

Deep beneath the earth's surface lies a very unusual sort of mine and it's in these boulder strewn depths that the activity takes place.

You are guiding Rockford, a cute little character, round this mine with the express purpose of gathering points by collecting valuable objects such as diamonds.

Although this game has 16 different screens and up to 84 levels of difficulty, Boulderdash will still operate on a 32K MSX. The basic idea is to dig through earth blocks collecting enough diamonds to open the exit to the next screen.

Your movements are complicated by a tight time limit and the ubiquitous boulders which lie around. As Rockford drills down through earth, dislodged boulders tumble down in heaps, squashing him if he's still underneath — very nasty!

In some screens, strategy as well as speed must be employed. For example, in some screens deadly fireflies and butterflies can kill you if you haven't manoeuvred the boulders to fall on them first.

Each of the screens offer a different challenge: the diversity of maze scenarios and variety of creatures add spice and excitement to the game.

It is impossible to get bored with Boulderdash — so much is going on — and for a fun and addictive game costing the relatively low price of £6.95, it is hard to beat.

King's Valley

by Konami

CART: £14.958

Fame, fortune and the secret of eternal life lie beneath the Valley of the Pharaohs just waiting for Vick, the famous archaeologist, to go and find them.

Of course it's no easy task: not only did the pharaohs employ the best tomb architects to design the crypts, but dangerous mummies are wandering around the pyramids guarding the mysterious sparkling jewels.

Gathering all these precious stones will reveal the secret of eternal life.

Once in the first pyramid, you have to act quickly because two mummies suddenly materialise and follow you around. Jumping over them or fending one of the swords scattered around is the only way to avoid certain death.

Besides getting through all the pyramid levels, you've got to win points and the best way of doing so is to knock down mummies and collect jewels. Some of the jewels are hidden in brick boxes.

Four mummy types exist: red ones walk slowly and then rush up and down the ladders, white ones just wonder along slowly while the blue and yellow ones leap up and down as they move along.

King's Valley is the sort of game that will have you hooked, the graphics and sound effects utilise MSX's capabilities brilliantly and it's another winner from Konami.

Crazy Train

by Sony

Crazy Train is basically a huge mobile puzzle built out of railway tracks and stations on a square grid.

The idea is to successfully manoeuvre your train along tracks and through stations, but as in all good games, there are a number of obstacles to overcome.

For a start, part of the puzzle is missing and so you have to keep juggling sections of track by moving parts of the grid around. In this way you make sure the train doesn't derail, crash or collide with an oncoming train.

The longer you keep the train running, the more points you notch up. Points are also scored for calling at all the stations. Variation is added by plunging you into darkness.

In later stages, the game gets quite difficult with aggressive enemy trains, dead ends and more stations.

Strategic planning is the key to success with this game and as there are 43 stages to get through, it pays to plan your moves carefully.

As the train moves round the tracks, a realistic chugging noise can be heard together with whistles. Although at £18, the game is well out of reach of the pocket money brigade, it could be well worth saving up for.

Pastfinder

by Activision

By the year 8878 A.D. exploration had become a thing of the past, except for a select band known as the Pastfinders.

In your capacity as an intrepid Pastfinder, you are in control of a Leeper, a spidery blue vehicle with the capacity to leap over obstacles, move very fast and slow down to a crawl.

Using this craft, you roam around the lands collecting artifacts. These need to be deposited at bases and stations—but first they have to be found.

Before starting on your quest, a map of the lands and a list of supplies are displayed. Supplies are crucial to your survival and include gadgets to slow down the Leeper's absorption of radiation, a protective shield, a signal scrambling device and a de-radiator which helps eliminate radiation.

There are a huge variety of landscapes, most of them resembling obstacle courses. The obstacles—ridges, arches and disappearing doors—are deadly to touch so should be avoided at all costs. Enemy ships hover about or attack and can be shot for points.

Pastfinder combines the best qualities of an arcade, adventure and strategy game. It is a superb example of what a computer game can be.

Dorodon

by Sony

Nasty multi coloured gremlins are out to get Dorodon, a harmless little creature, as he blunders round a maze of swinging doors in a desperate attempt to turn them all red.

Each maze scenario is characterised by a grid of blue dots, yellow and blue swing doors. By guiding Dorodon through these doors, they should turn red.

In the first screen, the doors turn red and remain red, but in later screens, moving back through the doors causes them to change back to blue or yellow—very frustrating!

Passing through metamorphic marks yields 100 points and leaves the gremlins in an unhappy frenzy. If they are caught in this state, points are gained. Collecting apples also wins you points.

Moving over windmills turns the screen haywire and can trap the gremlins. Imprisoned gremlins are kept at the side of the screen and gain you bonus points. The fatal logfires inhabiting the maze should be avoided.

A series of whistles, beeps and arcade pinball-like sounds liven the game up and the graphics are excellent.

We found Dorodon to be enchanting, addictive and it's possible to get a good score even if you're not a brilliant player. However, £18 is a lot to fork out for a game.

Hole In One

by Monwood

Most golf mad addicts would brave blizzard conditions just to get their daily 18-hole fix, but with this cartridge, golf courses are a thing of the past.

It brilliantly simulates the golf game, but leaves out the unpleasant aspects such as the fortune lost in golf balls.

Before taking your first swing, carefully read the instructions because there is a lot of information to take in before you can play: wind direction, wind velocity, the different types of club and the distances between teeing-off and the hole.

The course covers a wide variety of landscapes—deserts, peninsulas, three-dimensional trees and wide expanses of water. This means that each of the 18 holes poses a different challenge.

All the information you need to take a shot is listed at one side of the screen and once everything is set up, you take the stroke and hope.

Once the ball moves onto the putting green, a close-up is shown together with the green's slope.

Skill and good judgement are needed in Hole in One and after a few rounds, your game will rapidly improve.

Both golf players and non players will love this game. It is complicated enough to engage interest, generate enthusiasm and is definitely worth £14.95

Ghostbusters

by Activision

You've sung the song. You've seen the film. You've read the book. Now play the game. It's Ghostbusters and it's now on cassette.

Your aim is to run a Ghostbusters franchise at a profit and save New York from ghosts. The opportunity to purchase a vehicle and tools to complete the job are given to you and with them, you are meant to roam the city streets looking for ghosts to bust.

The Temple of Zuul rises in the city centre and yellow slimmers can be seen crawling towards it. PK (psychokinetic) energy builds up, threatening destruction.

When a building flashes red, it means that ghosts are there and need catching. Using two men armed with negative ionisers and a trap, you catch the ghost—but it is a knack.

Money for the business is earned by collecting ghosts and stopping the marshmallow man who stomps towards the temple.

Eventually two unstoppable characters called the gatekeeper and Keymaster reach the temple. If you have more money than you started with, the next stage is reached.

At first, Ghostbusters seems to be quite complicated, but you'll soon get the hang of it.

Ghostbusters is a little pricey, but is original and full of variety.

Road Fighter

by Konami

Eat your heart out Niki Lauda because we've got hold of the fastest car in the racing business—a red hot roadster especially designed and brought to us by Konami.

We've spent the last fortnight thundering along race tracks through arctic wastelands, along cliff highways and over precarious suspension bridges.

All the road racing action takes place on a grey road that twists and turns through various landscapes.

As you speed along, five other vehicle types inhabiting the road can cause you aggravation—the 18-wheelers chuck oil drums at you and purple GT cars knock you off the road.

Other dangers to watch out for are the twisty roads—these narrow suddenly from three lanes to two—oil slicks which send the car into a dangerous skid and your fuel supply. Driving over pink hearts lying on the road refills the tank.

Road Fighter's graphics are colourful, realistic and really liven the game up. The sound effects of cars skidding and exploding are fantastic.

This cartridge contains one of the best road racing games around and, at £14.95, it's a real bargain.

Sorcery

by Virgin Games

The cassette inlay describes yet another scenario involving evil forces controlled by an evil Necromancer, ravaging the ancient lands.

It sounds corny, but don't be put off because it's one of the most original arcade games that we have seen in a long time.

You play the part of the sorcerer, moving from room to room—there are 50 in all—freeing all of the other sorcerers who will help in the fight against the Necromancer.

On your way, you'll come across various objects. Some have obvious uses such as swords and axes, but others are a little more obscure.

Moving from one room to the next seems simple—you just pass through the doors—but there are secret passages which can only be used in the right circumstances.

All the while your time and energy are running out, although it is possible to replenish the latter.

Very little documentation accompanies the program—annoying at first because so little is explained, but in the end we found that the game's attraction is to discover what isn't explained.

If you're looking for a game combining the best aspects of an arcade and adventure, Sorcery is worth considering, but beware, you could become very addicted.
